A Question of Priorities

As the academic year ends, it is time to evaluate the year at Salisbury State and take a look at what the events of this year meant in terms of what will happen in the future of the college.

The grading system has been changed; the college has increased public relations and admissions efforts to attract quality students and insure stable enrollments; the college has promised to make its standards tougher.

But are people happy? Are students happy with their education and life here at SSC? Are faculty and staff happy with their jobs?

We would think that answer is no.

For things to change for the better, however, those people who run this place have to realize that it is not policies but people who make a successful institution. In other words, before you please the Governor, the Legislature, the Board of Trustees, or the community, you have to please the consumers—the students.

It will be interesting to see how the efforts to attract more students to Salisbury State fare when the doors open in September.

It is not a glossy brochure or ivy-covered walls with white trim that will attract and keep people at Salisbury State College, it will be whether or not the student is comfortable with his surroundings.

Word-of-mouth advertising was partly responsible for the enrollment growth of SSC in the late '70's, and we would like to see if that same type of advertising will help or hurt Salisbury State in the '80's.

President Bellavance himself has said he subscribes to the theory that schools that demand more from students will be the ones that survive during the period of dropping enrollments, and his whole program is based around that philosophy.

But if to demand more means to hassle more, which intentionally or unintentionally is the case, students may just decide to take their business elsewhere. Check the unsolicited testimony of a "frustrated freshman" in the letter to the editor section. If that letter reflects the majority's feelings, SSC just might be headed in that negative direction.

No Cooperation

College— an institution whose sole purpose is to educate and meet the needs of its consumers, known as students. Sounds good, doesn't it? Have you heard it before? Probably not—we made it up.

Ideally, it's a nice thought, but now let's get serious. Salisbury State College is not an institution by, of, or for the students. It's a business.

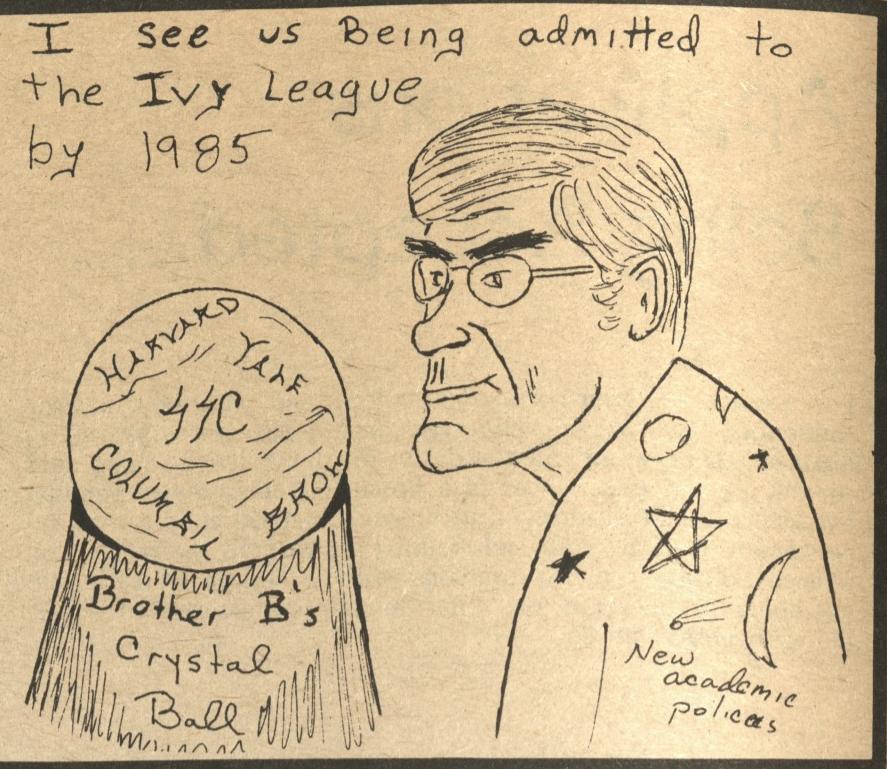

And, like in most businesses, there are those employees who do not enjoy their work, and let it be known to the people they interact with. For instance:

The other day, a member of the Flyer staff called an administrator on the phone to ask a few questions about a story. This reporter had to tell the administrator's secretary (in detail) not only what he wanted to know, but also why he wanted to know it, only to be informed that the administrator was not in at the present time. Not only was it none of her business in the first place, but it was also very rude and degrading.

Another instance; After the Derby Days dance that was held in Tawes Hall, it was learned that some students had used one of the windows in the Flyer office to get into the dance. The window did not have a screen, and so provided easy access into the building. When this was realized, maintenance was notified in order to get a screen put in. A few days later, two maintenance people arrived saying that they were there to "fix a window, or something..." When we told them what the problem was they asked if the window had been open. When we told them it had, they made one smart-assed remark and were gone. Had they stayed around, they would have been informed that the window stuck, and that we were unable to close it. So, for future reference, if anyone needs to gain access to Tawes Hall, our window is still stuck without a screen (that's Tawes 102, folks).

These are only two instances where SSC employees have been rude to the students, but there are many others. If there weren't we would not even mention these at all. Granted, the majority of employees here are pleasant, conscientious people.

However, there are those people who don't realize why they are here. This is a college—a place for students. If it weren't for the students, none of them would be here. This is our school, and we should not have to be treated like second-class citizens. In other words, if people do not like students, they should not have a job at an educational institution in the first place!

Letters to the Editor

Final Good-bye

Dear Editor,

Since this is the last issue of The Flyer for this year, we would like to take this opportunity to say good-bye and thank-you to all our friends at SSC.

We will be leaving Salisbury at the end of June to begin a new challenge at Drury College in Springfield, Missouri. We say good-bye to all of you that we may not see again. To any of you who may be traveling our way or just want to visit, we offer an open invitation. To all of you we offer our thanks for your many kindnesses and tremendous support during our difficult times. Most of all we offer our thanks for many happy memories.

The Crawfords
(Dr. C., Mrs. C., & Ellen)

Good-bye SSC

Dear Editor,

This is a special letter to thank all of the wonderful people who I have met in my four years at Salisbury State College. I would especially like to thank Carol Bosserman and Vince Leisey, without their care and guidance I would not be graduating this month.

I want to express my thanks to all of my friends, those who will be graduating with me and those that still have some years to complete here at SSC. I only hope that graduation day is not the end for all our friendships but a new beginning. Special wishes and thanks go to Maria, Janice, Chris, Joanne, Tyrone, Debbie, Andrew, Mike, Karl, and Tom.

Nice Talk

Dear Editor,

After reading the letter in today's issue of The Flyer I felt compelled to write to you, the Editor. I can't believe the stuff they serve us is actually food. I have not eaten a breakfast there since the second week of February. For some reason I just can not bring myself to eat sausage that bounces when it's dropped. The bacon is so "crispy" that if you attempt to cut it, it breaks into a million little pieces that ridiculous and outrageous occurrences we students have had to live with. I'm sure there are a great deal more that other students could add to the list. Now we have been notified that our tuition has been raised a substantial amount for the upcoming semester. I can't comprehend paying any more for what I didn't receive in the first place.

I've heard that there was a time in the past when SSC was run with efficiency, logic, and a certain amount of order. A time not long ago when students had a voice in how their college was run, and were both very happy and very proud of its administration. I am sorry that I missed this, for I don't feel we will see that at SSC for some time.

And you won't be seeing me at SSC, either.

Salisbury Hosts National Tournament

By Richard Midcap

Salisbury State College has the eyes of the nation—or at least those eyes belonging to the nation's tennis fans—upon it this week. The reason for this unusual attention is the NCAA Division III National Tennis Championships that begin today in Seagulldom.

Eighty-five of the finest Division III tennis players are involved in the championship tourney, which includes a 64-draw singles slate and a 32-pair draw in doubles. Play begins at 9 a.m. today with opening round matches and climaxes with Saturday's singles and doubles finals, which begin at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., respectively.

Two of the 85 participants can claim a homecourt advantage in the championship tourney—Seagulls Jim Schenk and Scott Wight. Schenk and Wight each qualified for singles play and will team together as a doubles entry.

Schenk was seeded number one on the Seagull squad for most of the year and compiled an 8-14 record while playing nearly all the toughest players on the SSC schedule. That record was deceptive, however, as it included a key win over a nationally regarded player from Glassboro State and some other notable players. Schenk, in fact, ended the season ranked sixth in the South Atlantic Division III region. Wight, who also played a tough schedule while compiling an 11-10 mark, was ranked tenth in the region.

"Scott and Jim are players who started as reserve players—they played very little in their freshman year and sparingly as sophomores," said Burroughs of his national qualifiers. "They've come on like gangbusters since then. They're a real success story."

Burroughs then talked about a pair of Seagulls whom he felt should have qualified for nationals but did not—sophomore sensation Mike Jones and solid senior Ladd Layton.

"Mike and Ladd both had very good seasons and I thought they deserved to be in the tournament," claimed Burroughs. "Mike had the team's best record (18-4) and he was only one victory short of tying the team record for victories in one season. Ladd was a money player—if we absolutely had to have one win, we knew he was the man to get it."

"But it was tough getting it down to the top 64 players," continued Burroughs. "When the eight regional chairmen made their recommendations, we had 104 players and we had to cut 40. We had a four-hour telephone call Monday to finally get down to the limit."

Six perennial national powers tied for honors by qualifying four singles and two doubles entrants. Leading these multiple qualifiers—and tournament favorites—is defending national champion Gustavus Adolphus. Adolphus also brings back the 1980 Division III singles champion, Chris Burns, who was unseeded last year but mowed down six straight opponents to win the title.

The ordeal of footing the bill for one of these type tournaments, meanwhile, has been an educational experience for Burroughs.

"I tell you what... I can give anyone a real lesson in inflation," remarked the Seagull coach. "What I planned on for expenses two years ago is way short now. Everything from meals to nets to chairs for the umpires have gone up."

The tournament costs are to be defrayed by the charges being required as entrance fees. Each player is required to pay ten dollars for each event entered. That money, however, does not come close to covering the expenses already incurred in getting ready for the tournament.

"You have to get an awful lot of donations and we've gotten them," said Burroughs. "Drinks have been donated for the entire week for the courts, the socials, and the coaches' meetings. And the tournament balls (worth six hundred dollars) have been donated by the Penn Company."

The costs are not being absorbed by television money, either.

"We put in our bid for the tournament and had it accepted two years ago," commented Burroughs, who also was director for AIAW women's tennis championships in 1978 and 1980. "The first thing that comes to mind is that we're happy to have received the bid. It's good exposure for the college and for the (tennis) program. This is the ultimate for Division III tournament."

Burroughs also let it be known that the arrangements for the tournament could not have been carried out if it had not been for the "involvement of the entire college community."

"It's an awful lot of work," said the Seagull mentor of the tournament preparations. "Everyone on the (SSC) team has been working hard and we've had everyone in the (physical education) department, maintenance, and Hunter Smith and his trainers involved."

It is obvious from talking to Burroughs that he feels all the hard work has been worthwhile. "It's really exciting and a lot of fun," said Burroughs, who has spent much of the last two weeks on the phone talking with interested coaches around the country. "It's an exciting atmosphere for all of us. All of our players are charged up and we'd like to do well in the tournament in addition to hosting it."

One reason SSC was able to get the bid to host the national tournament was Salisbury's reputation as the "tennis capital of the East Coast." Burroughs credits Salisbury tennis genius Bill Riordan, Jimmy Conners' former manager, for much of this reputation.

"I think more than anyone else, Bill Riordan is responsible for giving the town that name. We've all been kind of riding on his coattails," said Burroughs. "He's done so much for tennis around here. There's so much tennis going on around here, from the pros to the women's tournaments and now with the men's tournaments—the reputation has been rightly earned by this city."

This week's tourney is getting national media exposure, with the 24-hour sports network, ESPN, planning to televise both the singles and doubles finals. The ESPN crew will be setting up Friday and will make taped highlights of the semi-final matches.

Most of the other publicity will be coming from Gains Hawkins of the public relations department. Hawkins will be sending out the results to all the news services, including AP and UPI, while a tournament press guide will be available. Other publicity will be handled by the athletic departments and athletic directors of the schools involved.

The ordeal of footing the bill for one of these type tournaments, meanwhile, has been an educational experience for Burroughs.

television revenue," noted Burroughs. "We can use some funds from it but we don't get any profit."

Burroughs also remarked that this tournament has been harder to put on than the two recent women's championships due to the school schedule.

"This is the first year we've had to do the tournament while school was still going on," said Burroughs, who was done in, like so many other people, by SSC's new winter break. "It's made it that much harder to get everything done."

The style of the dance was not impressive nor entertaining. All "Jungle Jazz" amounted to was three women, dressed in diaper-type costumes, stomping their feet and swinging their heads of hair about. "Jungle Jazz" was very unimpressive and boring.

All in all, the dance company showed some very good dance numbers with one exception. This concert was not one of their best but was still a fine evening of entertainment.

The one dance number which was not up to the quality of the dance company was "Jungle Jazz." It was performed and choreographed by Linda Herb, Suzanne Moore, and Karen Woodsum.

If You Could Change One Thing At SSC, What Would It Be?

Jeff Sheats - The ridiculous questions in Gulls Eye View.

Connie Oxford - I would like to see more students get involved in the SGA and the CCPB.

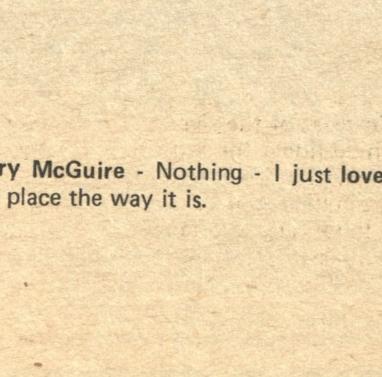

Steve Wilson - I would return the academic calendar to the way it was with a 3 week winter break.

Sherry Kimble - If I could change one thing about SSC, it would be to have more student participation in activities and organizations. The school offers a lot; I just wish the students would take full advantage of what they have.

Daryl Lambert - More funds allocated to build a fine arts center!!!

Jerry McGuire - Nothing - I just love the place the way it is.

Tennis Ends Season With 15-7 Slate

By Richard Midcap

Salisbury State concluded its tennis season with a bang, running off five straight victories to allow the netters to end the 1981 campaign with an impressive 15-7 mark.

"We had a good year and that's what the players will tell you if you ask them," said tennis coach Dean Burroughs, who had his eighth straight winning season as the SSC mentor. "We finished just short of outstanding. Our record was good and we also had a very competitive schedule."

Indeed the Seagulls did. Salisbury was unbeaten (8-0) against Division III schools and held their own in the rest of the schedule, which included 12 Division I and a pair of Division II squads. The Seagulls also qualified a pair of players—first and second seeded singles performers Jim Schenk and Scott Wight—for the NCAA Division III tournament that starts at Salisbury today.

"This year we'll graduate our top three players—Jim Scott, and Ladd Layton—but we should have a good team again next year," commented Burroughs, who has his fourth, fifth and sixth ranked players returning along with some impressive junior college transfers and incoming freshmen.

The netters were 10-7 after dropping consecutive matches to Navy and Catholic, but they rebounded in style. SSC blazed UMBC, 6-3, and then avenged a 1980 loss with an 8-1 thrashing of George Mason University. Salisbury proceeded to erase Mt. St. Mary's 6-3, and down Gettysburg, 9-0, before finishing out the season with an 8-1 demolition of Frostburg State.

Burroughs had special praise for Schenk and Wight, who completed their collegiate careers by earning the invitations to nationals.

"It takes a special type of player to stand up to the pressure of playing number one or number two," said Burroughs of his top two. "They've had to play the best our opponents had to offer all season long."

Ladd Layton, "our money player", according to Burroughs also had a fine season. He finished the year 14-8 playing number three and had several crucial victories.

Mike Jones, a sophomore starter, paced the teams in victories and winning percentage with an 18-4 (.818) record.

He naturally missed qualifying for nationals and, at 29-8, is a head of Larry Knopf's 56-win career mark.

Sol Knopf, Larry's younger brother, was the top freshman. He concluded the year with a 12-8 record and finished as the team's fifth seed.

Another freshman, Robert Barnas, came on strong at the end of the season. The LaPlata, Maryland native started the last five matches at number six and not only won them all but posted all straight set wins. His .778 winning percentage (7-2) was second-best among regulars.

Sophomore Pete Schenk also came on strong at the end, teaming with Layton for a 5-0 record in doubles in the final five matches.

By Jerry McGuire

The ads say "I love New York" for vacations, but the Salisbury State men's lacrosse team will have other thoughts in mind this afternoon.

The Gulls will be making their fifth straight appearance in NCAA Division III post-season competition as they visit St. Lawrence in the Empire State today at 3:00.

SSC advanced to the national tournament on the strength of their 13-2 record, which prompted the NCAA lacrosse committee to give the Seagulls the third seed in the tournament.

Their record would have been discounted by some alleged lacrosse "purists," had it not been for the Gulls rousing 20-15 victory over Washington College at home two weeks ago. That spirited performance, plus an excruciatingly close 12-11 overtime loss to Division II Loyola last Saturday in Baltimore, showed the pollsters that SSC did belong among the lacrosse-playing college elite.

SSC and St. Lawrence are not strangers to each other, having met last season in post-season competition, and the two schools also played at the beginning of this season in Baltimore.

Last season, SSC drew St. Lawrence as a first-round opponent, and the Gulls took a 15-11 upset win. In the latter contest, Charley Clark's ten soundly trounced the New Yorkers 16-3, but some Gulls discount that score as a measure of the strength of both teams. St. Lawrence is located near the Canadian border and had very little practice time outdoors before the March 22 meeting. "It'll be a lot closer this time," said SSC midfielder Don Codignotto.

Coach Clark feels the same way about today's contest. He said that SSC played an "exceptional" game in March, as the Gulls' faceoff man Bo Feaga dominated and SSC controlled the flow of the game. Clark added that the Gulls had two regular-season contests under their belts by that time while St. Lawrence only had played scrimmages against club teams.

Clark also felt ground balls would be a key to a Salisbury victory, saying that the games where the Seagulls have done well are the ones where they fought for the ball.

If SSC does take St. Lawrence, the odds are heavily in favor of the Gulls staying in New York. Today's winner will face the winner of second-ranked Cortland and Ohio Wesleyan.

Should SSC win the semi-final, they would probably face all-powerful Hobart, who drew a bye in the first round and who will play the winner of the Roanoke-Washington College game.

LAX NOTES — the 13-2 regular season mark is the best record in Seagull lacrosse history...SSC would be playing at home, were it not for the oft-mentioned troubles with facilities and money, which are both needed to put on an NCAA post-season event...This could be the best chance for the Seagulls to take the championship, as the Gulls lose almost half their starting line-up and playing reserves to graduation...Several Gulls are being considered for All-American and a spot in the annual North-South all-star game.

Lockeroom

By Bob Thomas

It's time again for the sports editor of The Flyer to announce the winners of the annual SSC sports awards, some in jest and some in all seriousness.

This past year has seen a bumper crop of athletes and teams compete and fair well in many sports. So, without further adieu, here they are:

MALE ATHLETE OF THE YEAR: John Dolch, the SSC national wrestling champion who successfully defended his title and led Mike McGinley's team to another outstanding year.

FEMALE ATHLETE OF THE YEAR: Sissy Natoli, the gutsy basketball guard and softball shortstop who has starred for both teams over the past four years, and who is a natural team leader.

TEAM OF THE YEAR: The SSC lacrosse team that compiled a record of 13-2 during the regular season and are undoubtedly an underdog favorite for the national title.

COACH OF THE YEAR: This award was a tough one, but we came up with two picks. Mike McGinley for rebuilding a wrestling squad and giving the team a strong nucleus to build upon, and Charley Clark for leading the aforementioned lacrosse team to the top of the heap in Division III lacrosse.

THE MR. FIX IT AWARD: To Hunter Smith and his trainers for doing an outstanding job of patching up every member of SSC athletic team.

THE ERRATIC SNAPPER AWARD: To Jerry McGuire for consistently being inconsistent while snapping for the SSC football specialty teams.

THE BUM PHILLIPS DESIGNER WEAR AWARD: To football coach Bill Yeagle for those fantastic boots that were the talk of the sidelines.

THE I WANNA BE IN THE FLYER AWARD: To Jeff "Gorilla" Hill for his consistent efforts in trying to be named in this column for his injured body in football and his basketball prowess in IM.

THE CONSUMPTION OF VICES AWARD: To the rugby team for keeping the beer distributors in business and the baseball team for their contributions to the chewing tobacco companies of America.

THE ABNER DOUBLEDAY INVENTION AWARD: To all the stickball players from Choptank Hall for their contributions to the growing sport.

THE YOU'RE A MUDDER AWARD: To most of the same guys who got down and dirty on rainy days and made mudsliding the fad of the future.

THE WE CAN'T WIN THE BIG ONE AWARD: To the members of the field hockey team for once again falling short in the regionals.

THE EMPTY SEAT AWARD: To all of those fans who failed to show up for SSC sporting events but were quick to criticize their performances.

THE FAITHFUL READER AWARD: To all of those people who waded through the sports section and my columns throughout the year.

Have a good summer and we'll see you in the fall for another year of quality sports coverage at SSC.
